MapleWorks Technology, a leader in software development outsourcing solutions and services for network management and communications, announces that it has entered into a partnership with AutomatedQA, a firm specializing in innovative software development and quality assurance tools based in Beverly, Massachusetts.

* Network management mobility and changing access demands are forcing enhancement and improved adaptability

Under the terms of the partnership, MapleWorks will create the scripts necessary to quickly make a test environment productive. MapleWorks has years of expertise in test automation, specifically on AutomatedQA's TestComplete product, an automated testing tool, with unmatched support for unit, functional, regression, distributed and HTTP performance testing at the project level.

As a proven provider of software development outsourcing services to network communications product suppliers, serving the carrier and enterprise markets, MapleWorks is a perfect partner for Automated QA.

* Test automation ensures a product functions according to specifications and customer requirements, and are an essential part of any software development quality process

According to Vice President and Co-founder Paul Gasparro, "As a proven provider of software development outsourcing services to network communications product suppliers, serving the carrier and enterprise markets, MapleWorks is a perfect partner for Automated QA."

* Software development outsourcing - Managers serve as reliable liaisons that accelerate a project's productivity, as well as provide real-time visibility throughout the project's development cycle to ensure that customers have the utmost confidence during every stage of the project.
